

Stores close at seven o'clock to night.

Did you ever notice how persistently a salesman will sometimes urge you to buy a particular article of dry goods or clothing?

Perhaps it didn't occur to you that he had a pecuniary interest in selling what you were reluctant to buy.

Such is one of the bad results of paying "premiums" to salespeople for working off slow-selling goods. And the custom is almost universal—more's the pity.

Better deal where slow-selling goods are moved by quick-selling prices, and where sincerity is the principle that animates employers and employees alike.
